"I am perfectly amicable to it all. I am going away willingly, so my husband may marry the woman he now loves. I am trying"—this with a pathetic little smile—"to see the funny side of it. I am going direct to my old home in Monroe. The idea of such feeling existing against me in a town that is full of divorced people and scandal mongers. It irritates me."

"Neither is the talk of my fellow townsmen causing me any anxiety. If they want to try to tar and feather me let them go ahead. I shall sell my home in Monroe if I get a good offer for it. Otherwise, I expect to keep it."

"I shan't do anything or write for a while," he added. "But I am through with the town of Monroe. The idea of such feeling existing against me in a town that is full of divorced people and scandal mongers. It irritates me."

Nearly every man and woman in the town of Monroe had assembled at the railway station to witness the departure of the Earle party, and the artist was visibly worried lest some of his disapproving neighbors might attempt violence, as there had been talk of tar and feathers for the apostle of freedom of love. He affected great solicitude for the safety of the discarded wife, saying to the station agent:

"I hope there will be no disturbance, for her sake."

Arrived at the pier, Mrs. Earle stopped at the gangplank of the Rydland long enough to say to a reporter:

"I am perfectly amicable to it all. I am going away willingly, so my husband may marry the woman he now loves. I am trying"—this with a pathetic little smile—"to see the funny side of it. I am going direct to my old home in Paris. My father or some other relative, no doubt, will meet me when I land on the other side."

"I accept the sacrificial role in which my husband has placed me. I shall leave my husband with his freedom and the woman he has chosen for my place. I shall try to teach my son to forget. I hope some day to be able to forget, too. In renunciation there is pain, but also there is happiness. I feel now the pain. Perhaps I may find the happiness later."

"For Mr. Earle I have no censure, only sorrow. For my successor, the future Mrs. Earle, I have only the most charitable feelings. I give my husband over to her because it is his desire. I leave them both to a fuller realization of what all this means to me—a realization which must come when they shall have felt the weight of public opinion."

About the time the Rydland sailed word came from Monroe that Miss Kittner had left the Earle place in a carriage with her brother. The carriage drove rapidly toward Newburg. It was suggested that she had become frightened, and had decided to go to Newburg and take a train there for this city, to stay until things quieted in Monroe.

Mr. and Mrs. Jack London have been at the Shipman ranch. They returned on Tuesday afternoon to Monroe.

APOSTLE OF FREE LOVE AND A MOB

NEW YORK, September 4.—The "artistic temperament" collided tonight with "public decency," when Ferdinand Pinney Earle, the artist, reaching Monroe after having shipped his wife and child to Europe in order that he may marry his "soul's affinity," who is said to be Miss Sophie Kittner of Bethlehem, Pa., fell into the waiting and welcoming arms of the mob.

The mob, composed exclusively of Earle's neighbors and former friends, dragged him from his carriage, which they overturned, trailing him in the mud, lashed him with a horsewhip and might have responded to the repeated suggestions that a rope be secured had not the Mayor of the village and the Chief of Police recalled them to their senses. He gave Earle a safe conduct to his home.

In the afternoon Earle had a narrow escape from being mobbed by a crowd of unsympathetic longshoremen while he was waiting on the Hamburg-American pier in Hoboken to wave farewell to the wife and infant son.

Five minutes before the liner left with his wife and his baby aboard the artist-social-millionaire-poet "fed from the Hoboken dock of the Hamburg-American Company, dodging the blows and the hard words that were aimed at him by the crowd of dock laborers who knew nothing of the longings of the temperamental nature or the "emancipation of love," and who are so crude as to have nothing but contempt for a man who would trade wives at the promptings of his artistic soul.

Indeed, if he had not been a genius, one might have said that he ran like a coward.

On the deck of the outgoing Rydland stood a slender little woman in gray, Earle's wife, holding by one chubby hand a sturdy little round-faced two-year-old—Earle's child. The discarded wife was smiling gamely through the tear marks on her face. To the reporters who waved a farewell to her she waved back, her little white handkerchief fluttering bravely.

Earle's cynical view of the domestic tragedy was shown when he said to one of the reporters:

"I couldn't get this much advertising in five years' work, ordinarily," he said. "Of course, I am at the mercy of the public press, so far as notoriety is concerned. It is not worrying me."

"Neither is the talk of my fellow townsmen causing me any anxiety. If they want to try to tar and feather me let them go ahead. I shall sell my home in Monroe if I get a good offer for it. Otherwise, I expect to keep it."

"I shan't do anything or write for a while," he added. "But I am through with the town of Monroe. The idea of such feeling existing against me in a town that is full of divorced people and scandal mongers. It irritates me."
